

Los Angeles residential: new developments on the block

Luke Halls

Everybody's got a dream in Los Angeles. Whether you're a Hollywood hopeful, a movie-maker or a high-flying shaker, we all need an apartment where to rest our heads – a spot to kick it, where we can be ourselves. From the polished pavements of Century City to the sandy sidewalks of Downtown, LA's luxury residential blocks are rising faster than reputations – and from the penthouse terraces, you might just be able to make out your name in lights. Roll-up to our line-up of Gaggenau-kitted, Kvadrat-curtained, Laufen-trimmed paradises in the sky – there's no place we'd rather be.

Four Seasons Private Residences Los Angeles

The Four Seasons Private Residences Los Angeles translates the high-end hospitality group's amenities, architecture, design and lifestyle into an exclusive development of 58 homes. Occupants of the luxury block, which is split into three wings, have an array of services at their disposal including a private theatre as befits the LA entertainment scene and the opportunity to order a made-to-measure private culinary experience straight to the dinner table.

The development's crown jewel is the 1,115 sq m penthouse. The open-plan outdoor/indoor living space is designed with the LA climate in mind, providing a residential experience to enjoy the city lifestyle across the year. From a private six-car garage, the resident can access the entire top-floor space via a private elevator. From there, a 840 sq m rooftop garden oasis provides the perfect city retreat, complemented by a swimming pool and an unrestricted 360 degree panoramic view.
